

Alprazolam Cost Without Insurance: Prices, Generic Options and Ways to Save

The alprazolam cost without insurance can vary substantially depending on the dosage, quantity, pharmacy, formulation, and whether you receive generic alprazolam or brand-name Xanax. Generic alprazolam is generally much less expensive than the brand-name version.

How Much Does Alprazolam Cost Without Insurance?

Current U.S. cash-price listings show that generic alprazolam can be relatively inexpensive. For example, Drugs.com currently lists generic alprazolam 0.25 mg from about $4.88 for six tablets, 0.5 mg from about $5.09 for six tablets, and 1 mg from about $9.15 for 30 tablets.

What Affects the Cost?

Several factors can change the price you pay without insurance:

- Medication strength
- Number of tablets
- Generic versus brand-name product
- Immediate-release versus extended-release formulation
- Pharmacy and geographic location
- Available pharmacy discount programs

- Local pricing and availability

If you do not have insurance, you can ask several pharmacies for their cash price for the exact prescription. Prescription discount programs may also reduce the amount you pay.

Some online price guides and discount programs provide estimates for participating pharmacies, but prices can change and should be confirmed before filling a prescription.

Your doctor or pharmacist may also be able to discuss whether an appropriate lower-cost generic option is available.

Why Prices Can Be So Different

Prescription-drug pricing is not uniform across pharmacies. The same medicine and quantity may have different cash prices depending on the pharmacy and pricing arrangements.

Brand-name Xanax can also cost dramatically more than generic alprazolam. For this reason, comparing the exact medication, strength, quantity, and formulation is more useful than searching for a single nationwide price.
